Normative social distance is the kind of difference we perceive between ourselves as members of groups and others who are not members of the same groups. It is the distinction we make between "us" and "them," or between "insider" and "outsider." Normative social distance is not necessary judgmental in nature. Rather, it can simply signal that a person recognizes differences between herself and others whose race, class, gender, sexuality, or nationality may differ from her own.

Social Distances Changing minds

This social distance is also known as body space and comfort zone and the use of this space is called proxemics. Why the distance? Regulating the distances between us and other people provides us with several benefits, including: Safety: When people are distant, they can't surprise attack us. Communication: When people are closer, it is easier to communicate with them.
